The Voice of Hope in Christ radio broadcast was developed by it's current producer Victor Philogene and Carroll Angenor. These Haitian ex-patriots believed that their fellow immigrants who have embraced America's political freedom and it's opportunity for economic prosperity, needed a spiritual compass as well. In 1994, with that in mind, Angenor and Philogene began a rudimentary 2-hour radio show that included in it's structure, a little music, some bible studies and other religious programming. The program aired out of Ft. Myers and Immokalee, Florida communicating in French and Creole, a Haitian dialect with French roots.

The VOHIC Radio Broadcast is based now in Naples Florida and reaches an audience south from Naples northward to Tampa and from Newark, NJ to Brooklyn, NY each week. During its many years on the air, it has seen a markedly positive evolution in programming and technology.
